ABSTRACT

Contributions to this book are based on presentations at a conference hosted by The Urban Institute in April 1994 to consider the challenges of achieving self-sufficiency for the nation's poor. Achieving long-term self-sufficiency for society's members is a fundamental social goal, but the problems involved, particularly those of finding enough well-paying jobs, are complex. Issues are explored in the following contributions: (1) "Welfare Reform: Historical Context and Current IssuesS (Demetra Smith Nightingale); (2) "Making Work Work: Welfare Reform in the 1990s" (Nathan Glazer); (3) "Outlook for the U.S. Labor Market and Prospects for Low-Wage Entry Jobs" (Rebecca M. Blank); (4) "Employment Prospects of Welfare Recipients" (Gary Burtless); (5) "Subsidized Employment and Non-Labor Market Alternatives for Welfare Recipients" (Rebecca A. Maynard); (6) "Stimulating Employment and Increasing Opportunity for the Current Work Force" (Laurie J. Bassi); (7) "Out-of-Welfare Strategies for Welfare-Bound Youth" (Hillary Pouncy and Ronald B. Mincy); and (8) "The Clinton Alternative to 'Welfare as We Know It': Is It Feasible" (Robert H. Haveman). Each chapter contains references. (Contains 17 tables and 18 figures.) (SLD)
